

“What Went Wrong?”

Reflecting and Learning from Community-Engaged Research

PROPOSAL DEADLINE EXTENDED to April 14, 2014, 5:00pm Pacific

July 11-12, 2014 - Twin Cities, MN

Featuring keynote address by:
María Torre, Ph.D.,
Brett Stoudt, Ph.D.
from The Graduate
Center, CUNY & members of
The Morris Justice Project

Submit a proposal or register at:
engagedresearchconference.wordpress.com

Questions?

EngagedResearchConference@gmail.com

Members of the Twin Cities metropolitan area (Minneapolis & St. Paul, MN) in conjunction with the University of Minnesota are convening the first ever “What Went Wrong?” Conference from July 11-12, 2014, dedicated to understanding and enhancing community-engaged research practices. We recognize there is often just as much (if not more) potential to learn from our failures as our successes. Yet, we are rarely given intellectual settings to discuss, learn, and grow from our most challenging research experiences.

Dr. Torre is the Director and co-founder of The Public Science Project. For the last 15 years she has been engaged in critical participatory action research projects nationally and internationally with schools, prisons, and community-based organizations seeking to further social justice. Her work introduced the concept of ‘participatory contact zones’ to collaborative research, and she continues to be interested in how democratic methodologies, radical inclusion, and notions of solidarity impact scientific inquiry.

Dr. Stoudt is an Assistant Professor in the Psychology Department with a Joint Appointment in the Gender Studies Program at John Jay College of Criminal Justice as well as the Environmental Psychology Doctoral Program at the Graduate Center, CUNY. He has worked on numerous participatory research projects with community groups, lawyers, and policy-makers nationally and internationally. His interests include the social psychology of privilege and oppression, aggressive and discriminatory policing practices as well as critical methodologies.

The Morris Justice Project is a collaborative research team of neighborhood residents in the south Bronx and members of the Public Science Project, the CUNY Graduate Center, John Jay College, and Pace University Law Center. Sponsored by the Public Science Project, we have spent two years documenting experiences of policing in our 40 block community near Yankee stadium. Active in Communities United for Police Reform and deeply concerned about the NYPD’s use of stop and frisk, we are closely watching the historic Floyd v. the City of New York trial and the contested passage of the Community Safety Act.

The committee is made up of members from various Twin Cities’ institutions including Community-Campus Partnerships for Health, Youthprise, Network for the Development of Children of African Descent, Casa de Esperanza, and the University of Minnesota. And, thank you to the William T. Grant Foundation for their support.